

Local Designer and Coach Discovers 105ct Diamond at Mineral Show

Chatwick G. Pattersen-Taylor

DRUTEN - In a shocking turn of events, Tamlyn Botha, a creative designer and coach from Van Edel in the Netherlands, has made an incredible discovery at a local mineral show. While browsing through a jar of mixed minerals she bought from a vendor, Tamlyn stumbled upon a stunning 105-carat diamond that had been overlooked by everyone else.

“I couldn’t believe my eyes,” Tamlyn said in an interview. “At first glance I thought it was a quartz crystal just sitting there among all these relatively ordinary rocks, but something about it caught my attention. I picked it up and immediately knew it was something special.”

Tamlyn, who has a keen eye for design and aesthetics, recognized the diamond’s potential as a centerpiece for a new jewelry line she’s been developing. “It’s a once-in-a-lifetime find,” she said. “I’m incredibly grateful for the opportunity to work with such a rare and beautiful stone.”

The diamond, which has been valued at over $10 million, has already generated significant interest from buyers and collectors around the world. Tamlyn plans to showcase the diamond at an upcoming jewelry exhibition, where she hopes to attract even more attention and recognition for her work.

Jar of mixed minerals

For Tamlyn, the discovery of the diamond is not only a stroke of luck, but a testament to the power of creative thinking and vision. “Sometimes, you just have to look at things differently,” she said. “You never know what you might find.”

While the discovery has certainly put Tamlyn and Van Edel on the map, it remains to be seen what other surprises this talented designer has in store for us. The diamond is being held at the National Diamond Vault for safe-keeping.

105ct Diamond discovered at local mineral show

Creative Designer and Coach, Tamlyn Botha, is elated about her find.

She invites you to visit www.van-edel.com to help you discover the beauty in the things in and around you.